NTU Offers New Degree in Public Policy & Global Affairs

NTU’s School of Humanities and Social Sciences has rolled out a new undergraduate degree programme in Public Policy and Global Affairs (PPGA).

The first-of-its kind in Singapore, the programme offers an interdisciplinary curriculum that combines politics and international relations, public policy, and public administration.

It aims to prepare students for career and leadership roles in both public and private sectors in Singapore and the region.

Through the four-year direct honours programme, students will get to study, among other areas, policy analysis, programme evaluation, public financial management, human resource management, and non-profit management.

They will also receive professional training in political dynamics, international politics, comparative politics, comparative public administration, and global affairs.

The programme also aims to imbue in students the attributes of life-long learning, innovativeness, upstanding moral character, respect and capacity for leadership, teamwork and discipline, as well as a sense of professionalism.

Graduates are most suited for careers in civil service administration, public management, policy analysis, journalism, and research.

The Public Policy and Global Affairs programme will accept its first intake of students this August.

New Second Major Option for Psychology Undergraduates

Outstanding Psychology undergraduates can now take up a second major in biological sciences offered by the NTU’s School of Biological Sciences.

This new option reflects the interdisciplinary nature of the current research trend in psychology and biology. Students will not only gain breadth of exposure but also greater depth of study in a field very much related to Psychology.
